

Kroni House

Pristina, Kosovo

Kroni House is a contemporary residence shaped by the natural topography of its sloping site, where architecture and landscape are conceived as a continuous whole. Defined by a restrained monolithic white volume, the project balances clean geometry with sculpted curves that soften the relationship between the building and its surroundings.

At the heart of the house, an elliptical courtyard introduces daylight, greenery, and natural ventilation while organizing circulation through a gently curved bridge that transforms movement into an architectural experience. Sculptural retaining walls extend this language across the site, seamlessly connecting terraces, gardens, and outdoor living spaces.

Large glazed openings open the residence toward the infinity pool and landscape, dissolving the boundary between interior and exterior. Through its simplicity, careful proportions, and integration with the terrain, Kroni House creates a calm, timeless living environment where architecture is shaped by light, movement, and nature.
